Malawi Comps for Dev

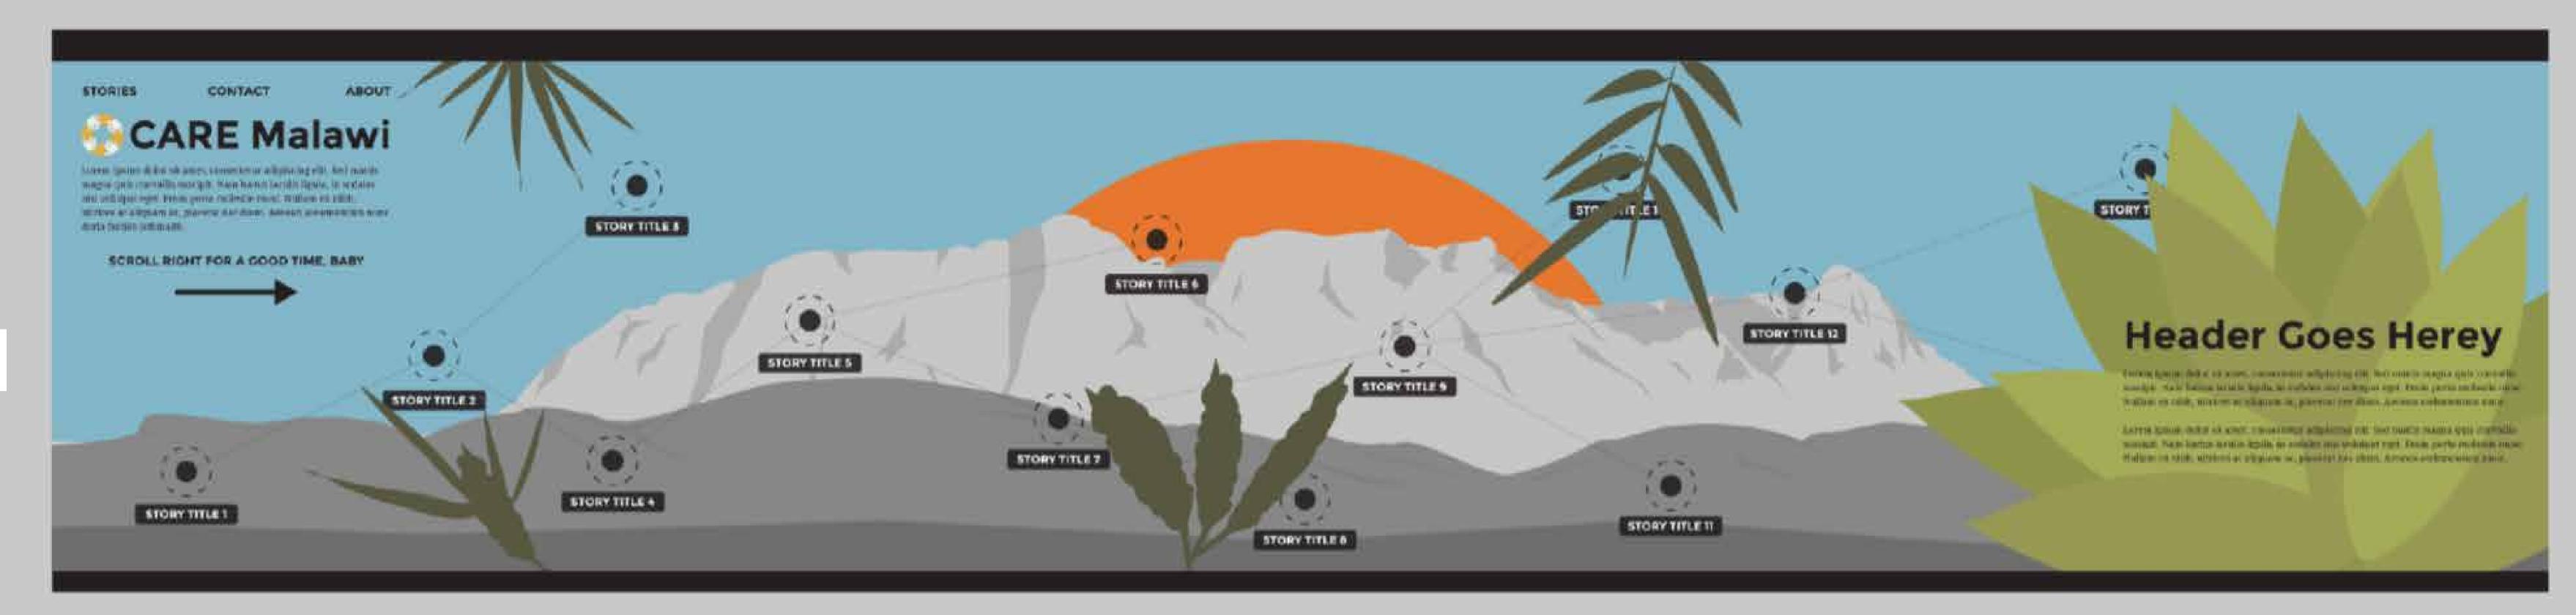

These are rough comps to get a complete sense of how the site will function for the dev team

The mobile version will function and look very similar except with a swipe motion instead of a scroll.

Colors and font panel is included for CSS- both fonts are Google Fonts so free to download with no liscensing.

It was discussed that the home page parallax of awesome will be a hybrid of graphics and images. I'm going to cut out some sample images by next week to use as placeholders to see if we can start getting a feel for how it will look and function and Dan will work on his awesome graphics.

Yay team!

Per our discussion with Steven, these will be facial images of the story characters

Some kind of obvious button or box that invites users to use the grid nav system as opposed to the map- Steven- was this what you had in mind?

The transitions between the pages will be the morphing modal window as seen in the codyhouse demo

Not sure what might be in the header but maybe about and contact links should go here?

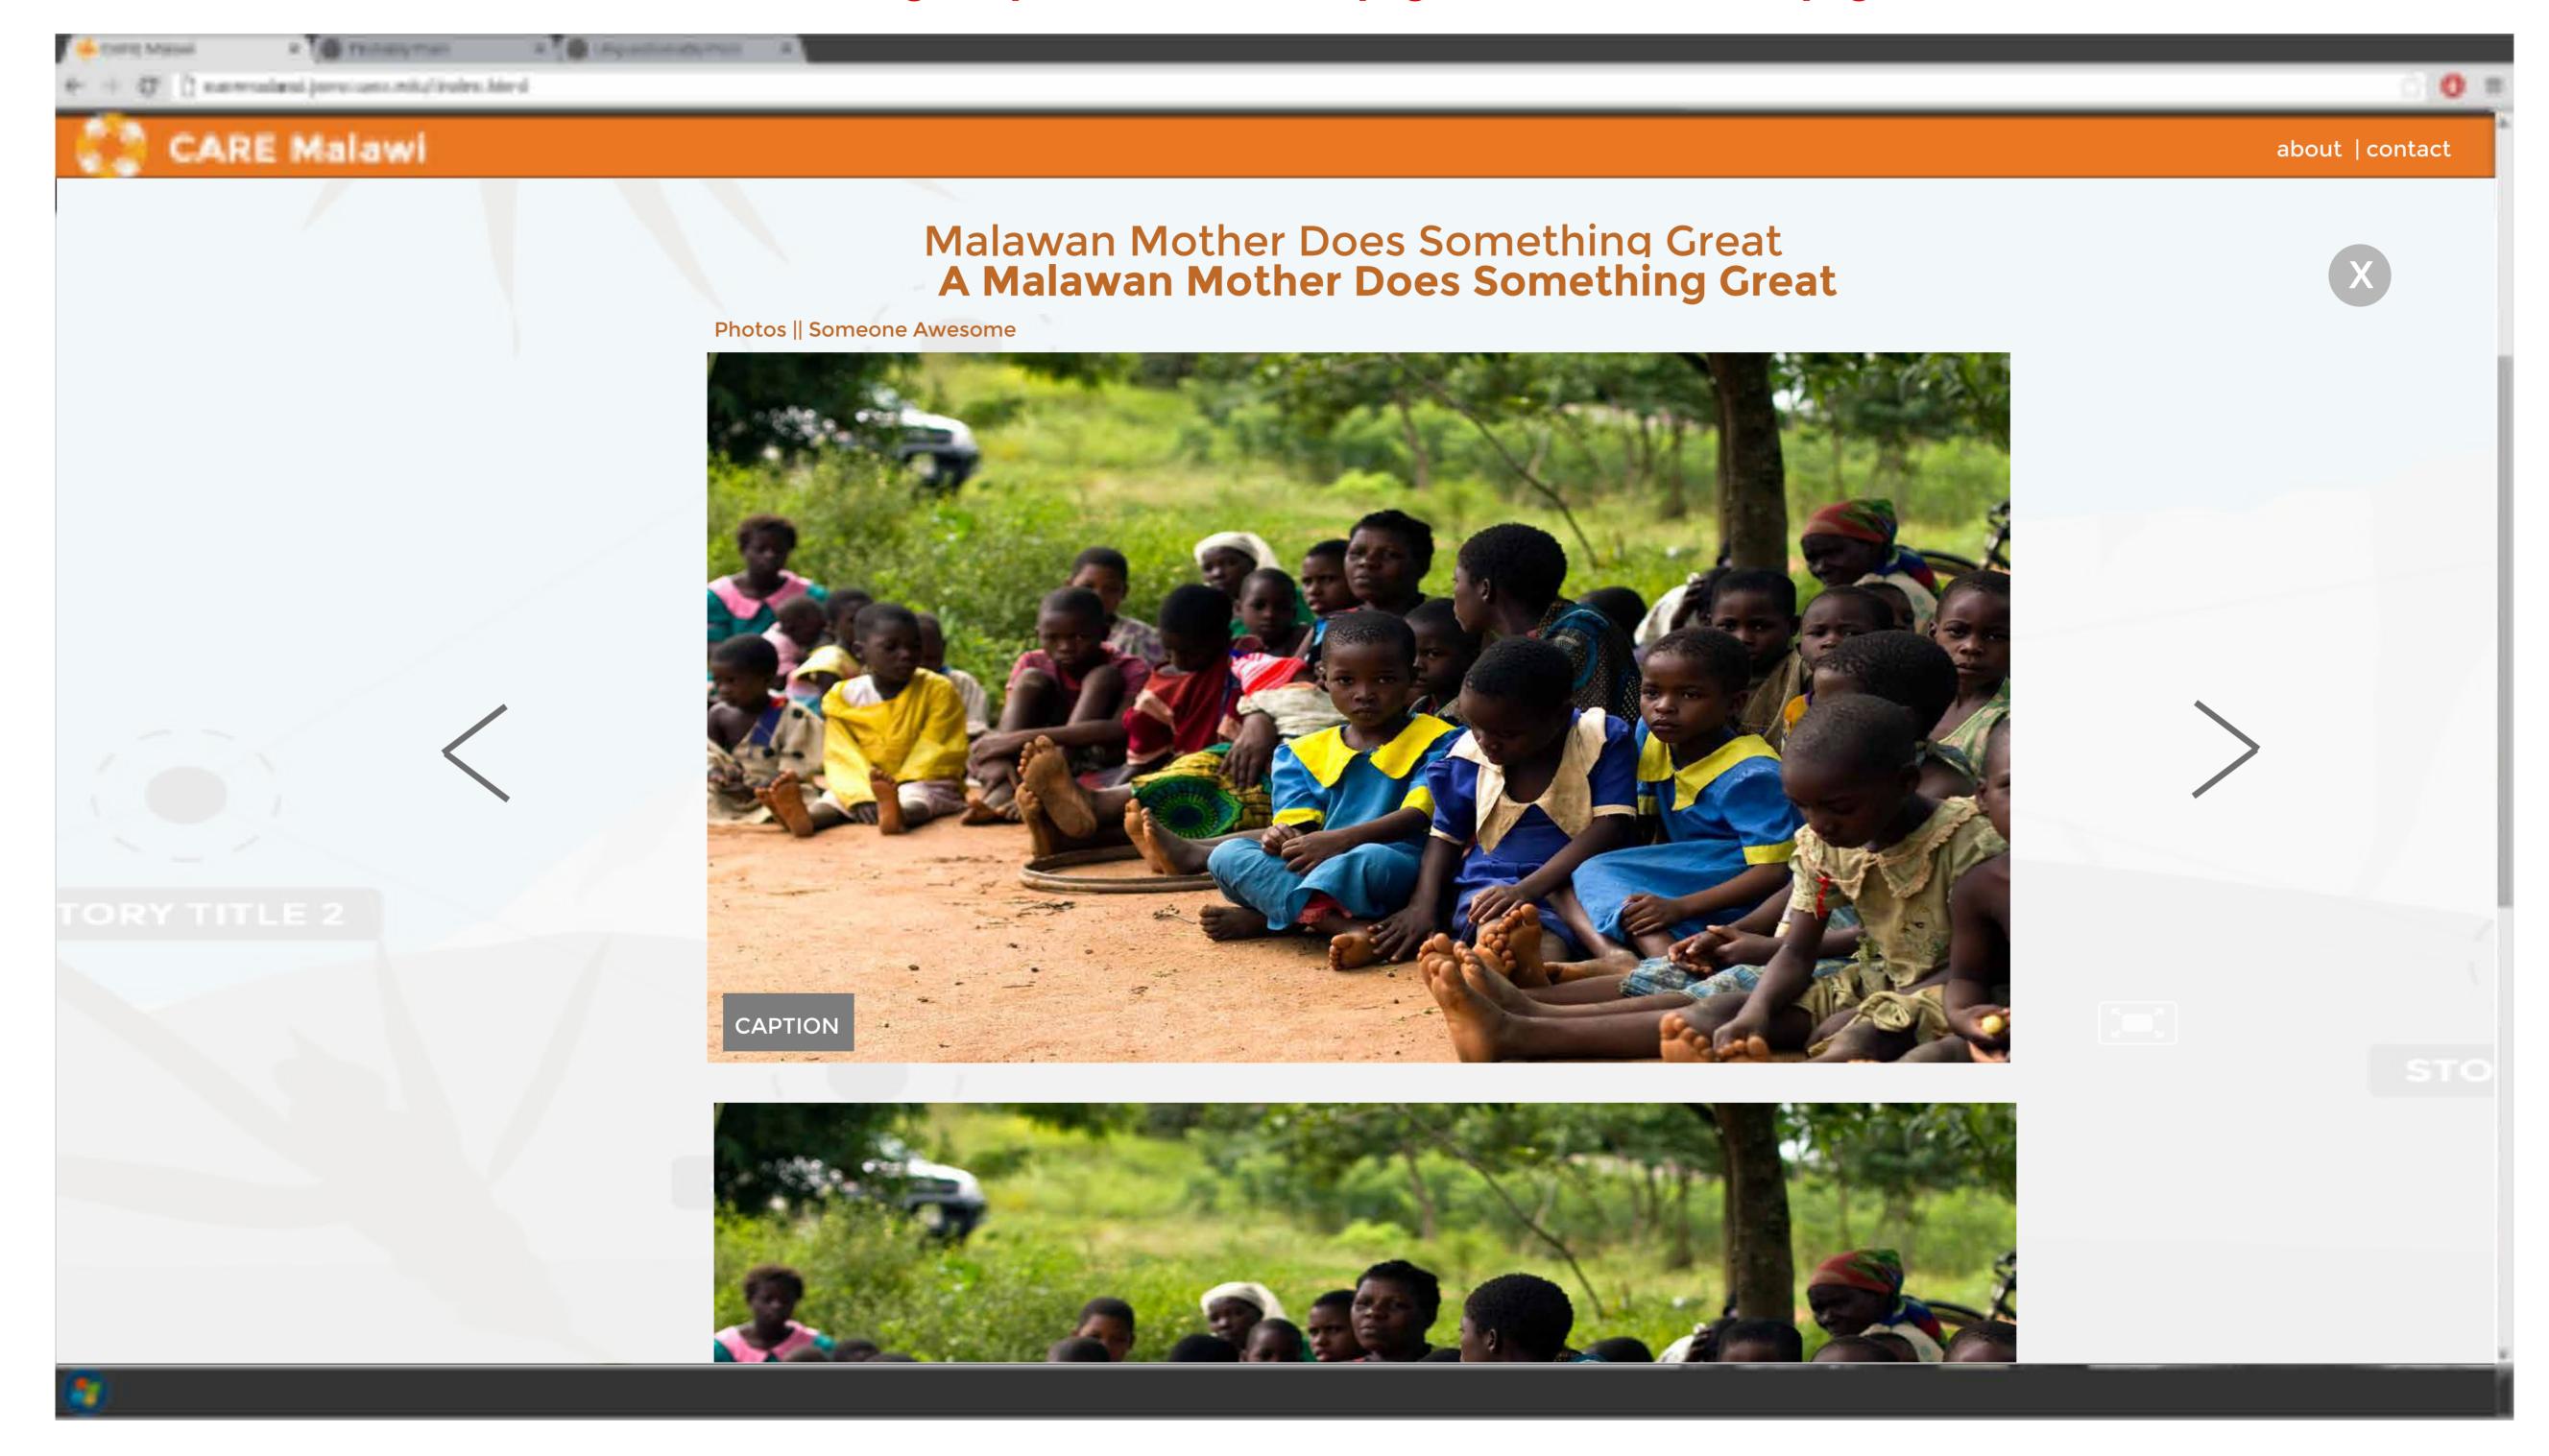

The "x" would take you back to either the map or stories grid section in a similar modal as in the demo

some kind of simple and subtle arrows would take you to next and previous stories

This would be a sample video page from either nav. It would be cool to have the map or some other graphic very faint in the bg to add a little depth to the page wo distracting from the content.

Sample Gallery Page with vertical scrolling and click-view caption arrows go to previous and next page as in other stories pages

The arrow would take you back to the map in case viewers wanted to see it again

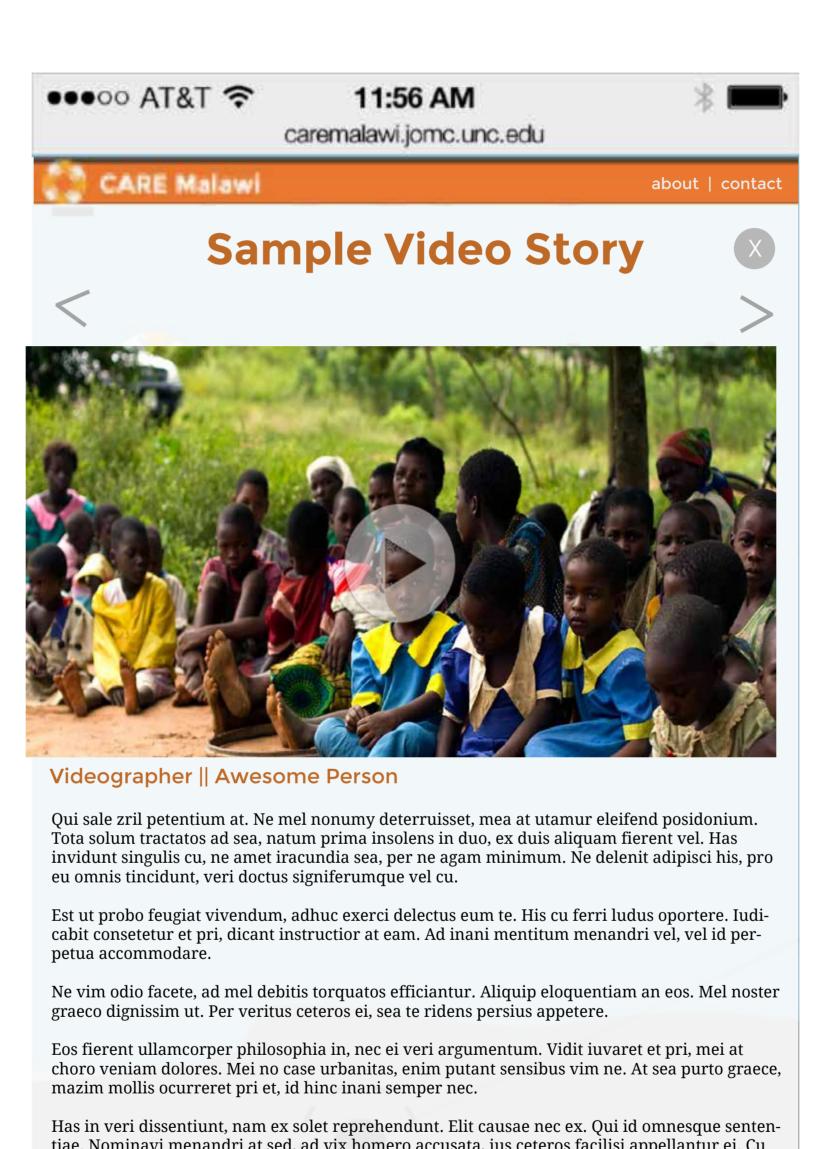

This is where the other nav would take you.

Since there is going to be 12-15 stories, maybe they can all fit on one page. Otherwise, there will be left and right arrows similar to the pages for consistancy to scroll between the categories
